Army's SATHI, a hand held computer for jawans PTI

Thursday, 06 January , 2005 , 11:36

Bangalore: Indian Army soldiers will soon be equipped with a hand held computer for co-ordinating with their comrades in combat operations.

The Army is conducting final user trials of - Situational Awareness and Tactical Handheld Information - (SATHI) in Jammu and Kashmir testing the hand held computers, built by a Bangalore-based software firm, in the battlefield against terrorists.

Encore Software, the pioneer of Simputer - the low-cost hand held device jointly developed with Indian Institute of Science (IISc) professors with an aim to bridge the digital divide has built SATHI along with a team of Army engineers.

Kashmir," Encore General Manager Samyeer Metrani told PTI.

SATHI sends its position through radio frequency on a constant basis, while the encrypted software has a mechanism to go blank if the device falls into hands of the enemy.

Army's Information systems engineers in the last two years have helped design SATHI that weighs 875 grams and can work in the hot deserts of Rajasthan to the biting cold of the Siachen, Metrani said.
